Can Fernando Diniz, nicknamed ‘Brazilian Pep Guardiola’, be Brazil football team’s saviour with his anti-positional style?

(November 28, 2023)

Fernando Diniz, the interim Brazilian coach, gets emotional when he talks about 1982. It’s the year he lost his father; it was also the year he fell in love with football. “It helped us (he and his brothers) forget the pain,” he would say in an interview with Globo. The ebullience of what the world calls the greatest team to have never won a World Cup would leave a lasting impression on young Diniz. “Although they didn’t win, they captivated many hearts and I was one of them.”

Brazil ends year in poor shape

(November 24, 2023)

Until this year, Brazil's national soccer team had never lost three games in a row. The Selecao had never lost a World Cup qualifying match at home. It had never had anything but wins against a visiting Venezuela team, for many years the weakest in South America. Interim coach Fernando Diniz, however, has had to endure all those setbacks in only a few months on the job - all while Brazil hopes that Real Madrid coach Carlo Ancelotti will soon take over. Diniz's troubles, and the lack of a confirmed answer from Ancelotti, have increased the pressure on the Brazilian team, even though qualifying for the expanded 2026 World Cup is still expected despite a 1-0 loss to Argentina on Tuesday.
