Artists Call for Boycott After Artforum Fires Its Top Editor

(October 27, 2023)

In the days after Artforum magazine fired its top editor, David Velasco, because of an open letter it published about the Israel-Hamas war, at least four other editors resigned and several prominent artists said they would boycott the publication unless Velasco was reinstated.

Divisions over how to discuss the conflict in the Middle East have frayed yearslong relationships between collectors and artists. On Friday, Nicole Eisenman and Nan Goldin criticized the magazine's owner for terminating Velasco, who had been its editor in chief for six years, and said they would no longer work with Artforum.

Celebrating South Africa's youth culture through photography

Recent headlines from South Africa have reported national crises, from rolling blackouts to the highest unemployment rate in the world and housing shortages. But a new photography exhibition shines a spotlight on the rich landscape of innovation and contemporary culture led by young people in the country.

In "A Young South Africa," (at the NOW Gallery in London until November 19), work from six photographers and creatives document the diversity of style, talent and thriving subculture among the "Ama2000s", the South African term for Generation Z. But it also showcases the evolving cultural identity of a country that is itself young.

Burnt-up rockets, satellites are polluting Earth's atmosphere, with unknown consequences

Scientists at the United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) investigated the stratosphere, a layer of the atmosphere, and found that it is peppered with particles containing many different metals from satellites and used rocket boosters vapourised by the heat of re-entry.

They made the discovery using analysis of data collected by a high-altitude research plane that flew over the Arctic region for an NOAA mission called Stratospheric Aerosol Processes, Budget and Radiative Effects or SABRE in short.

Moon is older than we thought, suggests samples brought by Apollo 17 astronauts

A new analysis of samples of the Moon brought back by Apollo 17 astronauts suggest that the Moon is 40 million years older than previously thought.

The Moon was formed more than 4 billion years ago when the solar system was still young and the planet was still growing. At that time, an object nearly the size of Mars crashed into our planet and the biggest piece that broke off formed the Moon. But there is still debate about exactly when this happened.

NASA's big update on Osiris mission: 'Struggling to open containers but...'

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has said that its team processing the sample retrieved from asteroid Bennu under the OSIRIS-REx mission has successfully removed and collected 70.3 grams (or 2.48 ounces) of rocks and dust. NASA's OSIRIS-REx, the first US mission to collect a sample from an asteroid, delivered rocks and dust from asteroid Bennu to Earth on September 24.

The material from Bennu – which the spacecraft collected from the asteroid's surface in 2020 – will offer generations of scientists a window into the time when the Sun and planets were forming about 4.5 billion years ago.

10 things to know about the partial lunar eclipse on October 29

A partial lunar eclipse occurring on the intervening night of Saturday and Sunday (October 28-29) will be visible from all places in India.

Though the Moon will enter penumbra at Saturday midnight, the umbral phase is expected to start in the early hour of Sunday.

Lunar eclipses are not as rare as solar eclipses. Once or twice or more times every year, the Earth, the Moon and the Sun line up in just the right way to create the “shadowplay” that we call an eclipse, according to NASA. There are three different kinds of lunar eclipses—total, partial and penumbral.
