Paleo-Indians changed Latin America; rock art in caves proves it.

April 13, 2024

Ancient humans moved to America 25,000 years ago. They told stories of their lives and how they changed the environment in stunning cave art. Humans first crossed into the American continent from Asia via the Bering Strait in several waves of migration between 25,000-15,000 years ago. The migrating hunter-gatherers found landscapes untouched by humans and full of unknown plants and animals. Paleo-Indian cultures migrating through (what is now) Latin America left traces of their lives, painting rock art in caves and on cliff faces Rock art has been found all over South America in caves and on cliff faces.

This unique solar sail is set to be launched above Earth and from a tiny space, it will turn into a 80-mtr giant up in the sky. It was stuff dreamed of by the most imaginative science fiction writers who let their imagination run away with them. However, those dreamed up devices lying around in dusty corners and bookshelves are actually being manufactured now and one, NASA's solar sail, is all ready to make its debut and prove that the technology is viable. This amazing instrument shows, like no other, that ideas rule the world like never before.
